

As a concerned citizen and consumer, I vigorously disagree with the proposal to repeal net neutrality. The Internet is a public utility, and the ability for monopolistic companies like Comcast to control what consumers can view on the Internet is disturbing. Here is my argument

- 1) Companies providing Internet have already received substantial subsidies from the government to build Internet pipelines. They control local monopolies in most areas they operate so it's not as if net neutrality is preventing their ability to compete and provide better services. They do not need more control and more profit
- 2) We need companies to innovate and provide services, media, and other consumer / B2B goods that will keep the US at the forefront of innovation. This is going to hamper that innovation by significantly increasing the barriers to entry

In sum net neutrality is pro business.
